THE GOLD RUSH IS ON!

The first true gold rush began with the discovery of gold in California in 1848. Everywhere men abandoned their families, businesses, and some said, common sense, in order to head out to a remote, little-known land where the promise of riches beckoned even the humblest and most inexperienced of pioneers.

At least a quarter of a million men reached this "land of plenty" during the five years (1848-1853) that comprised the gold rush proper, producing an extraordinary amount of gold, valued in excess of $200 million. Although most were Americans, the gold seekers came from virtually every corner of the civilized world, including China.

No "rush" of such proportions, wealth, or pandemonium, no hysteria so unrestrained or so world-encompassing in its influence had ever been witnessed before. Improved means of communication, especially through widely circulated newspapers, and the beginnings of modern transportation, such as clipper ships and ocean-going steamers, both contributed heavily to the magnitude and speed of the movement.

Although many "forty-niners" organized themselves into formally constituted "companies" before they left home, virtually all of these groups disbursed immediately upon reaching California. These circumstances left the individual to work out his own destiny among foreigners in a strange land utterly unprepared to cope with the throngs of newcomers.

Although merchants and shipowners throughout the world quickly adjusted operations to serve this booming new market, food and supplies of most kinds were scarce, expensive and subject to unsteady price fluctuations.

Housing was primitive and high-priced in the towns and did not exist at the mines, so each individual was resigned to building his own home or pitching a tent. Society was constantly in flux, with crowds of restless gold seekers stampeding off when each new mining town was rumored to be "rich," leaving many ghost towns in their wake.

The news of the "discovery" took some time to reach the East. It came at first in rumors, via ship around Cape Horn and up the Atlantic. Busy with their own aspirations, Easterners did not give much credibility to these whisperings in the early months of 1848. They had no time for the exaggerated tales that were constantly coming from the unknown parts to the west. As a consequence, the first rush to the diggings were mostly comprised of local folks.

The East was finally awakened to the rush when a letter from California Governor Richard Barnes Mason to the War Department announced: "There is more gold in the country drained by the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers than would pay the cost of the late war with Mexico a hundred times over."

Thus the rumor became fact. Beyond any reasonable doubt, the gold was there for the taking. In the mad rush of enthusiasm no one considered the hazards of the undertaking; no one seemed to realize that to only a small percentage of prospectors would come the big payoffs.

Fortunes were definitely made. Some men are said to have dug tens of thousands of dollars in a single week. This was particularly true at first, when gold was found practically on the surface of the ground. In 1849, $10 million in gold was mined; in 1852 the yield peaked at $81 million.

It was only natural that those hearing such fairy tale success stories should believe them to be the rule rather than the exception. However, the greatest "diggings" were rapidly cleaned out. Thereafter, many of the prospectors received merely living wages from a day's work. Standing waist-deep in icy river waters, their exposed skin baked by the scorching summer sun, these dreamers would labor washing heavy buckets of pay dirt in hope of someday striking the mother lode.

Indeed, the treks westward took a heavy toll on those with little perseverance, and only the brawniest breed of men survived the hardships of the wilderness and the cruel elements. Requiring superior physical strength, these perilous journeys cruelly punished those of lesser fortitude, and many paid for their dream with their lives.

It took a mighty tough character to survive the ravages of the west. Unfortunately, Jerrod Wilson wasn't one of them. A typical East Coast "city slicker," Jerrod could only dream of following in the footsteps of the great American legends who paved the way for the country's rapid growth and progress.

Despite his aspirations, the only history Jerrod seemed to be making was the news he wrote for the local paper. Not that Jerrod's job was so bad - his hard work and determination had earned him quite a few promotions since his days as a paperboy. However, it would probably take another 20 years of even harder labor before he would reach the top of the company ladder. Jerrod was patient, but he wasn't so sure he could hold out that long.

Maybe it was his long lost brother's disappearance some years ago, or maybe just the call of the wild, but Jerrod had an itch for adventure, a desire to follow in the rich tradition of his ancestors. Jerrod not only wanted to discover the whereabouts of his brother, but he also longed to learn about the mysteries that lie beyond the borders of Brooklyn Heights, the only home he had ever known.

Was it just the sunset, or perhaps the glisten of gold on the horizon that beckoned Jerrod westward?

What does Jerrod's future hold? Will he continue with the nine to five routine (yawn) of a secure yet somehow unsatisfying career? Or will he break free of his chains and head out west to where the action is?

His fate lies in your hands. Become Jerrod Wilson, and face the challenge of the California Gold Rush as you race against time and the perils of travel on a realistic simulation of life on the wild west frontier. Immeasurable riches lie just 2500 miles away! Good luck!
